Fair, Isaac and Equifax Give Consumers New Score Power Tools Offering Greater Insights for Managing Their Credit Health

Enhancements Include First-Ever FICO Score Simulator

May 21, 2002 (San Rafael, California and Atlanta, Georgia, USA) —As part of their long-term initiative to demystify credit scores for consumers, Equifax (NYSE:EFX) and Fair, Isaac and Company, Incorporated (NYSE:FIC) today announced the addition of new features to Score Power™, the only score delivery service to include Fair, Isaac's FICO® credit risk score and an Equifax credit report. The new features offer consumers deeper insights into their credit health, and a new interactive tool that will help consumers see what impact their financial decisions can have on their credit score. Score Power's new features are available today at _____ _____ http://www.web-mtg/Public/credit/fico_scores.htm

The cornerstone of the Score Power enhancements is the FICO Score Simulator. This new tool is the first and only interactive service that allows consumers to simulate their personal FICO score — the three-digit credit score used by the great majority of lenders to make credit decisions. Using the FICO Score Simulator, consumers can quickly understand how specific financial actions might impact their FICO score over time if other factors stay the same. By changing one factor at a time such as paying bills in a more timely fashion or opening a new credit card account, individuals can create any number of "what if" scenarios to help them decide what specific changes to make to their credit practices.

In addition, the score analysis report includes multiple click-through links to the consumer's Equifax Credit Profile™, enabling each consumer to view directly the underlying detail in his or her credit report. This direct link to the credit report helps consumers understand how specific factors have influenced their FICO score.

"Consumers tell us they want to easily understand how they are viewed by lenders and what they can do to improve their credit outlook," said Sue Simon, Fair, Isaac vice president for myFICO. "That's why we've created the first set of tools to enable consumers to get a look inside their FICO scores and understand how changes in their credit practices can improve their scores over the long run. These services are the next big step in our continuing push to provide consumers with the knowledge and tools they need to gain true credit empowerment."

"Offering consumers additional insight into credit scoring is yet another example of how we are demystifying credit reports, scores and the other tools lenders use," said Virgil Gardaya, general manager of consumer services at Equifax. "Providing credit reports, credit scores and our award winning identity theft protection product, Credit Watch™, Equifax continues to offer consumers world-class tools to manage their credit health."

Since March 2001, the Score Power report has provided more than one million consumers with their FICO score, their Equifax Credit Profile on which the score is based, and Fair, Isaac's analysis of that score with suggestions for actions to improve it over time.
